

ANTHROPOLOGY TRANSLATION

Anthropology is the integrative study of human beings at all times and in all places. It is a social science that deals with the origins, physical and cultural development, biological characteristics, and social customs and beliefs of humankind. Archaeology is divided into the following four fields: Biological (or physical) anthropology, Cultural anthropology, also known as socio-cultural anthropology, Linguistic anthropology, Social anthropology.

Anthropology is to study the nature of human beings, its basic concerns are the definition of the life of human and their origin, how social relations among human beings are organized, who the ancestors of modern people are, what the characterizations of human physical traits are, how humans behave, why there are lots of differences between different groups of human beings, how the evolutionary past of modern human beings have influenced its social organization and culture and so forth.

The application and study of anthropology is aimed at providing guidance for government and other organizations, it has achieved great successes in many aspects, such as the consequences of social change, knowledge of traditional social and cultural aspects. The main problem in the applied research is the problem of value judgment, that is to say, the problem between absolutely objective research and established policies.
