

About the project:

The client picked CCJK to work on a logistic website localization project. The client provided the English website template for us to translate English into Chinese. The translatable texts including service descriptions, pricing, company history and lots of technical terms in logistic field.

Our Solution:

1. CCJK powered by more than 40 in-House Chinese translators. All our linguists are required to have relevant academic qualifications, and must undergo a severer professional language testing before working with us.
2. Our PM assigned the job to the translator who has 5 years of experience in transportation and logistics translation. We only use the suitable translator for a project in the certain field. During translation, the translator referred to the technical vocabulary in our logistic term base. We clearly knew that linguistic accuracy and technical precision are paramount
3. We strictly followed the client instructions and put the Chinese translation under English text paragraph by paragraph, in this way, the client's engineer can easily copy and paste the Chinese translation on the new website.
4. The goal for website localization is to make sure that all localized content read like the writing was completed by a native speaker in the target market. It will improve user experience during visit the website.
5. When translations get done, the client launched his Chinese website online. Our QA specialists checked the Chinese website carefully and helped the client to correct several typesetting and line break errors.
