

REPETITION IN TRANSLATION

For some purposes, we could not avoid repeat some words in expressing our opinions. Sometimes it is used to emphasize the point, and enhance the speaker's view. Sometimes it can express the ideas much more lively and accurately. In other times, it may also describe a more specific and clear point.

While translation is to communicate the corresponding meaning of one language to the targeted readers. We can not ignore the repetition in translation, and we should try our best to relive the original implication.

Therefore, here are some sentences which can illustrate the significance of paying attention on the repetition in translation.

1. More and more new antibacterial agents are being discovered and applied. Some have broad spectrum application; others are limited. The scene shifts year after year as experience accumulates.

2. As a cardiologist I early be aware that the internist was not necessarily a good person to carry on the day to day work of prevention.

3. Each bronchus enters the lung separately at the hilum. It subdivided again and again, forming smaller and smaller divisions.

Our Services

-  Document Translation Services
-  Interpretation Services
-  Desktop Publishing Services
-  Video Translation Solutions

situation may vary. But the aim is only one, that is, to precisely and accurately localize the meaning of the original sentences.

Our Services

Document
Translation Services

Interpretation
Services

Desktop
Publishing Services

Video
Translation Solutions